Promotion of osteogenesis in vitro by laminarin extracted from Saccharina japonica. Laminarin (beta-D-glucan) extracted from brown algae, Saccharina japonica (Kirigirisawa), was investigated for its effects on osteogenesis in vitro, using cultured mouse calvaria.

Osteoblasts derived from calvaria were incubated with laminarin, and the amount of type I collagen, osteocalcin, and alkaline phosphatase (ALP) mRNA of the cells were determined. Addition of laminarin to culture medium induced a significant stimulation of type I collagen, osteocalcin, and ALP mRNA in osteoblasts. This suggests that laminarin extracted from S. japonica promotes osteogenesis in vitro.

What is it? This program changes settings of accounts in Windows 2003 and Windows Server 2008 Operating Systems. Most of them are defined by a local or group security policy. How to use it? You can run the program as a user with administrative rights. It is much more convenient to use Accounts Tuner as a SYSTEM account. This program runs as SYSTEM, which is the account

softwareQ: Laravel 5.4: One query to search an array of other keys From Laravel 5.3 onwards you can add multiple conditions to a where clause. This allows you to do queries like so: `$name = 'John';`

---

User::where('name', 'like', '%'.$name.'%'); But for example, what if I wanted to search for all users who had a specific location ID? Can I do this, say, in one query? User::where(array('in' => array(1, 2, 3, 4, 5))) Ideally, I could run this query, and would get all users who are in the array 1, 2, 3, 4 or 5. A performance-based rule, I also want to check that the given array is an array with only numbers, not strings:

User::where(array('in' => [1, 2, 3, 4, 5])) But this won't work. So, what's the best way to make this work? A: Take a look at the example below, `$ids = [1,2,3,4,5]; User::whereIn('id', $ids)->get();` or `$ids = new \stdClass(); User::whereIn('id', $ids)->get();`
