Vibrational and conformational dynamics of amyloid β -peptide in water at high pressure. Peptides or proteins associated with Alzheimer's disease (AD) form insoluble aggregates, the amyloid β -peptide ($A\beta$) being one of the key components of these aggregates. Very little is known about the structural preferences of the $A\beta$ in the nonaggregated state, which hinders our understanding of this process. In this work, we show that $A\beta$ exhibits a relatively low propensity for self-association and is conformationally biased in water at ambient pressure. Increasing the pressure from 0.1 to 5.0

Argumentations among health professionals are common in the health care team, in particular among nurses and physicians. They have been shown to be related to the characteristics of the team members as well as to personal characteristics such as personality traits, beliefs and values. In a palliative care setting, where specialists of different disciplines work together in a team, argumentations are more frequent and more forceful, since, by sharing common goals, and by being members of the same team, members increasingly become aware of their mutual dependence. Since argumentations can result in poor relationships, they should be addressed and understood by all members of the team. When these unbalanced relationships endanger the continuity of the care, professionals working in palliative care should be assisted by psychologists. This article provides guidelines to psychological consultants on how to deal with argumentations in the palliative care setting, so as to prevent or reduce conflict. FILED NOT FOR PUBLICATION
