Built in 1892-93, it is an example of Classical Revival architecture. It was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1982. History Construction of the courthouse, designed by Gilbert F. Young and Hecht & Maloney of Chicago, began in 1892 and was completed two years later. The architect was chosen in 1891 after a fire destroyed the previous courthouse and county offices. The initial design called for a single, two-story building. However, after Judge Harvey S. Miller and the state legislature passed a bill to exempt Wright's Bank, the county's largest bank, from state banking regulations, they had the building divided into three parts by a central block on the main floor and an apartment block on the upper floors. The latter was later removed. The building was originally designed to serve as the Elgin City Hall and Sheriff's office. However, after the building was complete, it housed other county offices until a new courthouse was built in 1937. Since then, it has housed the county administration offices. Architecture The courthouse is a three-story building that is roughly square in plan. The exterior walls are faced in Bedford limestone. A -story square tower rises above the center of the building's main facade. The central block is three stories, with a smaller, -story, east-facing wing at each end. Original features on the main block include pilasters at the corners, window lintels with stone keystones, and dormers with arched windows on the second story. The building is topped by a hipped roof covered with zinc. Original trim includes wooden casement windows, pilasters, and window hoods.
