Several European authors including Jean-ClaudeFor personal, business, IT, or technological reasons, many Americans want to reduce their carbon footprint. Some even make the effort to drive electric or plug-in hybrid vehicles. But, most of the efforts to reduce their carbon footprint take place at home. While most people can do a lot to reduce their carbon footprint, the reality is that much of it is shaped by the choices people make every day, according to a new report. Instead of focusing on single solutions, the new report recommends a combination of solutions to reduce emissions -- "bundled approaches." For example, the report calls for the widespread use of solar energy and other solutions to reduce electricity consumption. It also recommends moving away from gas and all diesel fuel in the kitchen and heating the home with environmentally friendly energy. Under the new Carbon Plan for America, more than 75 percent of America's carbon emissions come from household and municipal sources. Households make up roughly 60 percent of the nation's total carbon emissions, and the remaining 40 percent comes from municipal sources. Key Findings According to the new Carbon Plan for America, households are responsible for roughly 60 percent of the nation's total carbon emissions. The average American household produced about 10 metric tons of carbon dioxide in 2000. Per household, electricity consumption is responsible for about half of the total carbon emission. Households with central air-conditioning use an average of 8.6 metric tons of carbon dioxide per year. The report also identifies the following nationwide key findings: Electricity is the biggest carbon emitter in the average home. It accounted for 56 percent of the total. Water is the second largest contributor, at 21 percent. In the home sector, transportation is the largest carbon emitter, and it accounts for 20 percent of total emissions. In comparison, the transportation sector is responsible for about 12 percent of total emissions. This means that residential and non-residential buildings account for 88 percent of total emissions. Household and municipal emissions are roughly 38 percent higher than transportation.
