Flash Wave2Mp3 Converter is a program with a name that perfectly describes its purpose - it allows you to turn WAV files into MP3. The interface of the application is dull and uncomplicated. Importing audio tracks can be done by using either the file browser, folder view or "drag and drop" function. It is possible to work with multiple items at the same time. In the file queue you can check out the source path of each item. If you are satisfied with the default properties, then you can immediately start the conversion procedure by specifying the output directory. Otherwise, you can change audio and video preferences when it comes to the quality, channel mode, bit rate (constant or variable) and flags (e.g. copyright, original). Settings can be restored to their default values. Additionally, you can edit ID3 tags and set Flash Wave2Mp3 Converter to overwrite existing files. The audio conversion tool needs a low amount of CPU and system memory, in order to finish a task in reasonable time. It provides user documentation and has a good response time. Flash Wave2Mp3 Converter did not cause us any difficulties throughout our testing; it did not freeze, crash or display error dialogs. On the downside, you cannot preview tracks in a built-in audio player, select the number of CPU cores to be used or set Flash Wave2Mp3 Converter to power off the computer automatically or to open the destination folder when the tasks are done. The interface needs some major improvements but we must keep in mind the fact that Flash Wave2Mp3 Converter has not been updated for a very long time. The effect of phentermine, a new appetite-suppressant drug, on serum and liver cholesterol and bile acid excretion was studied in rats maintained for 4 days on different concentrations of this compound. Total serum and liver cholesterol levels were reduced at all the dose levels tested, and the incidence of significant doses in liver tissues, although low, was only present at the higher dose level. Total bile acid excretion into both bile and feces was depressed in a dose-related manner, the greatest reduction being in bile acid excretion at the higher doses. The percentage of total bile acid excretion contributed by bile acids and unconjugated bile acids was significantly reduced at all dose levels and seemed to be the result of a depressed concentration of newly secreted bile acids rather than an inhibition of bile acid secretion. The fecal bile acid excretion was depressed only at the highest dose level. Despite reductions in the concentration of cholesterol in the liver in the presence of both low and high doses of phentermine, there were no changes in the cholesterol synthesis or secretion. Fecal excretion of neutral sterols was depressed at all dose levels but remained significantly elevated above the controls. The efficacy of phentermine in reducing
