Initial Experience with a New Cerebral Autosomal-Dominant Arteriopathy Associated With Mental Retardation: Clinical, Dural Venous Infarction: A Rare Cause of Stroke. Purpose To describe clinical features, outcomes, and vascular pathology of a new cerebral autosomal-dominant arteriopathy associated with subcortical infarcts and leukoencephalopathy (CADASIL). Materials and Methods This study is a retrospective analysis of a new cerebral autosomal-dominant arteriopathy associated with subcortical infarcts and leukoencephalopathy (CADASIL), a genetic disorder characterized by recurrent subcortical ischemic strokes, white matter abnormalities on computed tomographic or magnetic resonance imaging scans, and progressive mental disability. Clinical and paraclinical characteristics were analyzed and compared with other pathologic entities. The following factors were evaluated for outcome: age at stroke onset, time between stroke onset and death, cause of death, baseline presence of dementia, and magnetic resonance imaging parameters of acute infarcts and microbleeds. A total of 39 patients with CADASIL were included. The mean age at death was 53.6 years (range, 39-67 years). Aphasia was reported as the leading symptom in 23 cases (59%). The median score on the Barthel index was 94 at the time of death. Sixteen patients died from causes not related to CADASIL. The causes of death were cardiac arrhythmias (n = 5), bronchopneumonia (n = 3), sepsis (n = 3), or liver failure (n = 1). Seven patients died from CADASIL-related causes: progressive mental disability (n = 4) and cardiac arrhythmias (n = 3). Outcome was favorable for 34 patients (87%) and unfavorable for 5 (12%) patients. Dementia at the time of death was more frequent in the unfavorable group (p = 0.014). In the unfavorable group, mean normalized volume for the acute lesions was increased as compared with that of the favorable group. Vascular pathology was compared between the 2 groups. A higher proportion of patients with CADASIL had microbleeds (odd

But the basis of the exclusion is not that all private, commercial vehicles are unsafe. It is that some, depending on the circumstances, are. See id. (noting that the Code finds “commercial vehicles... inherently unsafe because their use for such purposes as delivery and delivery-like services is inherently dangerous to persons on the public highways”). Furthermore, the DVRP distinguishes between commercial and non-commercial vehicles, see id. (stating that the “possibility of future danger created by commercial vehicles will vary from case to case... depending on such factors as the age of the vehicle, the condition of the tires, the speed of the vehicle, and how the vehicle is being operated”). By contrast, municipal vehicles are not different in the nature of their design from private vehicles. All of them are designed for a particular purpose, and they all require drivers. Thus, if the dangerousness of a particular vehicle to its intended users depended on who was driving it, we would have no reason to distinguish between private, commercial and municipal vehicles. As it stands, we are left with the notion that the dangerousness of some commercial vehicles depends on who is using them, and 11 Case: 14-12681 Date Filed: 10/12/2015 Page: 12 of 16 the dangerousness of non-commercial vehicles is not dependent on who is driving them.
