Dexmedetomidine and Enflurane Protect Against Ropivacaine-Induced Neuromuscular Blockade in Children. Ropivacaine is increasingly used in pediatric anesthesia. However, studies evaluating dexmedetomidine's and enflurane's neuromuscular recovery-sparing abilities in children are lacking. A randomized, double-blind, parallel-group study compared the neuromuscular recovery-sparing properties of dexmedetomidine and enflurane at a recovery volume of 25% of the maximum-tolerated dose. Twenty-one children aged 3-9 yr undergoing surgery under general anesthesia with ropivacaine were assigned to receive either dexmedetomidine (bolus of 0.5 µg/kg over 10 min, followed by continuous infusion of 0.2 µg/kg/h for 3 h) or enflurane (induction with 5% enflurane in oxygen, followed by maintenance with 1% enflurane in oxygen) as a means of maintenance of the effect-site concentration of ropivacaine to 25% of its maximum-tolerated dose. The relative fasciculations, a decrease in the compound muscle action potentials, and a decrease in the compound muscle action potential/fasciculation ratio, compared with those before anesthesia and a stable ropivacaine effect-site concentration of 25%, were recorded after postoperative recovery from the block. The median time to initial fasciculations, 50% recovery of fasciculations, and 25% recovery of compound muscle action potential/fasciculation ratio were prolonged by 3.1- and 1.6-fold for dexmedetomidine and enflurane, respectively, compared with that observed after surgery with ropivacaine alone (P [Behavioral and cognitive effects of cocaine dependence: Neuropsychological analysis]). The objective of this study was to compare the cognitive profile of non-treatment addicted subjects with cocaine dependence to subjects presenting dependent and never-dependent

London-based artist Xavier Genet has created a pair of work for the Seven Stars by WAX art show, which are inspired by the "Holy Blood and Thorns" theme and will be on show at the Blue Room Gallery from December 17th - 30th, 2019. Genet has spent the last three months creating a series of 91 paintings entitled "Holy Blood and Thorns" inspired by the Christian mythology surrounding the lance used to pierce the side of Christ at the Crucifixion, as well as the Blood of Christ. In addition to the 91 paintings, Xavier has also created an accompanying colour palette of 91 colours, which he is offering to the public. The palette, which is a collaboration between Genet and Chris Oddy of WAX ink will be available to purchase from the Blue Room Gallery and selected stores from December 17th - 23rd, 2019. The artistic process for Genet's work has been heavily influenced by his love of Catholic mythology. The paintings have been created using a mixture of acrylic, gold, hot glue, carbon and Russian graphite. Each piece will be signed and numbered on the base. The paintings are currently in the process of being exhibited at the Blue Room Gallery. The works, which will be on show at the gallery from December 17th - 30th, 2019 are priced between £210 - £430. De kans op een leven lang geluk krijgen is de sterkste aanwezigheid in de mens. Het is de eigenschap van de mens om vaak en zonder waardigheid te leven, zonder 'gezond verstand', zonder respect en met soms ongelooflijke tranen. Onwaarheid, bepaalt een ander woord, is 'gezond' in het verhaal van de mens en bovendien heeft ze hoe dan ook de voorkeur. Het is daarom bijzonder moeilijk verhaal te brengen, zegt Kortrijkse psycholoog, Leo Roukens. Hij
