administration's proposed cuts to federal funding for sex education could disproportionately affect girls and women in a number of ways. Some of those ways include: Greater loss of access to free or low-cost sexuality education programs for low-income and minority populations. A greater decline in access to culturally competent sex education. Increased stress and anxiety among teens. Greater loss of sex education programming for young women. Greater loss of access to or ability to access contraception and abortion. Loss of community health organizations that could provide navigation services, support and treatment for sexual health concerns. While some of these are specific to sex ed programs, they are inextricably linked with the number of sex ed programs available. Overall, this has implications for the education of all children and teens, as well as those with marginalized identities. (The numbers below are for FY2018, which began on Oct. 1, 2017; these numbers are based on funding available from the Office of Adolescent

Ransomware has become one of the most common computer security threats nowadays. Studies have shown that within just 15 years the number of ransomware infections has grown from a few hundred to almost 30,000. The problem with this trend is that many more users of Internet are becoming victims of it. Enter the web browser, which has also become a favorite victim of many types of threats, and on top of it a big source of problems for many users. Just browse any well-known website, and you will soon notice that many of them are asking you to upgrade your browser. However, the majority of these problems are often created by the browser itself, by its own extensions. You can easily avoid all these flaws by following our guide. have problems with your Internet browser, the first thing to do is to start the browser in Safe Mode. The Safe Mode is a special mode that the browser runs in when it encounters a problem. You can enter this mode by pressing the F11 button and selecting the Safe Mode option. You will notice that a menu with various items will appear. You have to click on the Shutdown button in order to shut down the browser. Then click on the Restart button to restart the browser from the Safe Mode, and follow the next steps. Many of the errors that users encounter in their browsers are caused by extensions or plugins that are not installed properly or are even not installed at all. To fix this you need to go to 'Addons' tab from the page options. Select the extension(s) or plugin and remove them by pressing the Uninstall button. Price of Gasoline Hits $4 A Gallon for Fourth Straight Week By Reuters News Dec. 8 - As motorists try to cope with record high fuel prices, another record has been set - for the fourth consecutive week gasoline has hit $4 a gallon in the U.S. The gas price is now the highest since the price at the pump peaked in June at a whopping $4.114 and has returned to above the typical $3.80, as the U.S. prepares for the annual holiday shipping season and the Chinese Lunar New Year, at the end of the month. Higher fuel prices, combined with limited refining capacity and slowed economic growth in top oil exporter Saudi Arabia, had led analysts to predict the West Texas Intermediate crude benchmark would remain over $70 a barrel in 2013, instead of going back down to the $40 level. The average price at the pump in the U.S. is now $3.68 a gallon, up 11 cents from last week, according to the Oil Price Information Service. The steady rise in U.S. fuel prices, which have risen 15 percent over the past three months, is prompted by a combination of growing demand, a tightening global market and the world's largest oil consuming nation, the U.S., having to pay more to send oil to Asia and Europe. Gasoline demand, which so far this year has been at levels last seen during the summer driving season, has risen since the start of November, according to government data. While prices have increased in Europe and Asia, the U.S. is in the center of it all, with the pump price averaging a national $3.78, or 55 percent higher than the week before. Price surges, that are put off in favor of ease of access, could stall fuel demand ahead of the holiday season when fewer Americans travel for Christmas and New Year's. But experts told Reuters it could also have some short-term benefits, as the current high prices could encourage Americans to cut back on their driving. "If you reduce consumption, you reduce demand, so the average price should go down a little
