[Effect of marimba music therapy on the postoperative progress of patients after a cesarean section]. In this study, the effect of marimba music therapy on the postoperative progress of 100 patients who underwent a cesarean section was evaluated. Of these, 50 patients were given standard nursing and support, and 50 patients were given marimba music therapy. The patients were randomly allocated to each group. Nursing care was applied in both groups equally. In the patient group receiving music therapy, marimba music was played during the period of postoperative recovery, which included the first, second and third postoperative days. During that time, the patient was placed in an armchair, and the music was played in a soft sound. After 1 hour of music therapy, the patients were given a questionnaire. Three months after the operation, the patients and their families were contacted by telephone to assess their pain intensity, length of hospital stay, and the presence of complications. The results of the follow up telephone interviews indicated no significant differences between the two groups in terms of the patients' pain intensity, length of hospital stay, or the presence of complications. However, all patients in the music therapy group (n=50) answered that they liked the music being played during their postoperative recovery period, whereas only 40% of the patients in the control group (n=50) responded in the same way. Based on the results obtained, it was concluded that marimba music therapy during the first 24 hours after a cesarean section had no significant effect on the length of hospital stay or the presence of complications. However, our study showed that the patients in the music therapy group were more comfortable during their recovery period.
