DISCLAIMER: This blog is, to the best of our knowledge, the only source of non-spoiled information about Xellos. We do not have access to any leaked information at this time, but it is a group of my peers and I who have been working on the game. We have each learned many many hours about the game and our own game design from the staff. We have been covered by several news sources, and we and they have had the opportunity to see the game in its early stages of development. We have read the Xellos SDK and we know what Xellos is attempting to do. They are attempting to go well beyond BioWare's Mass Effect and Bioware's Dragon Age: Origins, by adding a fully voiced and acted narrative experience to the genre. It's an ambitious goal, and to our knowledge, the first game to attempt it. So with all that said, we have taken all of the learned facts and fabricated rumors about the game and posted them here. We have added some hypothetical facts of our own and we hope to expand upon the ideas and concepts that are laid out in the SDK and in the rumors (such as ship-killing, which has already been shown in BioWare games). Our goal is to leave the site with as many new ideas and concepts as possible. We will continue to build up this site to include forum posts and more, and any help or contributions will be greatly appreciated. We are not at this time in a position to divulge much about the game. We did read the entire article on Kotaku and we were impressed by the idea of the game, but we can't comment at this time. Many of the ideas in the article are sensible and fitting for the game. We look forward to the game announcement. A History of Xellos: Xellos is a sci-fi RPG with core elements of action, sci-fi, and social simulation (in-character). It's a game where players can customize their gameplay. For example, they can choose their gender, who they love, their social status and more. They can make friends with who they want. They can choose whether they want to sacrifice themselves to save their friends. And they can create the funniest stories of their lives on the way. The backstory of Xellos takes place one million years before the present. A race of super-intelligent alien creatures called Xell c9d1549cdd

Visit the official page: Follow Sokpop on: Blog Facebook Facebook Group Instagram Twitter MazeFinders "Taborek" is a Flash-based puzzle game reminiscent of old Simon's games. It's a brain-teaser-slasher in the sense that you don't know what's ahead, you can only look in the direction you just came from. Tabs are not just simple colored squares, they can move and turn themselves. The game is set up in a 3x3 layout of bricks, a maze that can be filled up to create a much larger puzzle. Lines can only be formed by two pieces, a blue line means you can move one piece one step forwards and red means you can move that piece 1 step back. Some tiles have arrows and word to indicate the direction they can turn. You can't move more than one tile at a time. To travel to a tile that is not currently displayed on the main screen use the navigation pad above. Keypad controls allow you to move your piece back or forwards, rotate and increase or decrease in size. Tap a tile to place it, or drag and drop it to the corner. Tile shapes that can be moved are blue, the others just indicate that you can place that piece. Sliders allow you to set a piece's size. Let the game play for you and see what it can do! Each of these databases will have separate users and validations. However, as users are required to login to the system in order to register themselves, I'd like to share their record across both databases. When the user logs in, their record is checked in both the default user database to check if their email address is in use and in the dedicated user database to check if they can actually login to the system. If this situation is possible, I'll be updating my models to reflect this process. If
