Evaluation of the DNA damage of spermatozoa is very important, because it leads to the reproductive potentials. However, there is not any method to observe such damage in the spermatozoa. The aim of this study was the quantification of sperm DNA fragmentation by terminal deoxynucleotidyl transferase mediated dUTP nick-end labeling in a rodent species. Since the DNA of Torpidus flavicollis rufiventris can be easily eliminated by alkaline and acidic treatment, the samples for EMBO assay were not only treated with 0.1M NaOH and 1.25M HCl but also stored at 4°C for 24h. The data have shown that the mean sperm DNA damage was significantly high in the alkali-treated group as compared to the control group (p
