• Okabe, Kei (FUJIFILM). "Think about games like Final Fantasy X, Final Fantasy XIII, and Kingdom Hearts. How do they all connect from the beginning to the end? Each game has its own original story, but they all flow like one single chain of events. And each game was different, but they all still build upon each other. And that's also what I want to accomplish in Elden Ring. I want to create a world that any player can enjoy on its own, or, in this case, enjoy together. All of the stories that connect together are the same, but I want players to enjoy each story as if they were a new RPG. The best part of the final fantasy series is that they all naturally merge into each other. I want players to enjoy leveling up even without friends or multiplayer. Through their own steps, players slowly connect together to become one. And that's what I want players to enjoy in Elden Ring." Ok: it is a very long time ago i didn't say anything. But this is my last comment for the thread. Yes, the SONIC series is easily one of the funniest shorts from ABZ. SONIC is a character that always catches up on something, and he is always in a state of disbelief and amazement. His reactions are cute and funny. I think he could pass as a person. OK. I have the same reaction to this as I had with FIRST AID and JUNGAJU. SPEEDBALL should have been a movie, not a short. I would have really wanted to see what this guy did to a basketball game. I don't need to see all that in a short. Just the setup of this scene was hilarious. I love the SONIC scene. I guess i just need a different angle on a funny situation. You know when Sonic and Shadow finally fist got in their first tussle. i just dont find it funny in real life like i do in this scene. The fade in is really lame, and the fact that the girls are in the same place as the ball makes no sense. Nasty! The original SONIC was a rip off, which could have been a good way to do a sequel. But they ruined it by not drawing it as bff6bb2d33

Acetylsalicylic acid ----- Aspirin is a salicylic acid derivate in pharmaceutical drugs and is the most common representative of a group of anti-inflammatory drugs called NSAIDs. It comes in the form of salicilate and has been shown to help reduce the risk of thrombotic events (heart attack or stroke) by inhibiting the platelet enzyme, cyclooxygenase. Numerous clinical trials found that people who were given aspirin as regular treatment had a lower risk of dying from cardiovascular events. Researchers have suggested that the cause for this is the inhibition of platelet formation. However, there is no solid evidence that shows that any NSAIDs can prevent or treat COVID-19. If we look at the underlying mechanism of actions of drugs, NSAIDs works primarily by inhibiting the expression of pro-inflammatory enzymes, such as cyclooxygenase-2 (COX-2). Current evidence suggests that the over-expression of the latter in vivo, may be involved in pathogenesis of severe
