"HyperMotion Technology has delivered spectacular results for FIFA since its first inclusion in FIFA 15," said Daniel B. Meyer, Director of Technology at EA SPORTS. "We're excited to build on the success of FIFA 15 with an even more immersive and authentic football experience for fans around the world using this year's FIFA World Cup tournament." We want to be the best. We want to provide the highest quality experience for every player using the best technology available. That is the driving force behind our work on FIFA, driving every decision we make. We've recognized over the years that FIFA does some things that are inefficient, and don't really work in the best interests of the fan experience. These limitations can be seen in the player's AI, animations, physics and controls, which can lead to a negative experience for the player. Addressing these inefficiencies is a large, time consuming process, and with just one team to plan, it takes time away from other areas of the project. For these reasons, we've made a decision to stop using "mocap" data for all player animations and AI for FIFA on consoles, as it does not add anything tangible to the game's experience. This is a real decision, one we made together with the development team in a collaborative effort. We want to be the best.
