Gameplay data compiled by a number of real-life soccer pros is used to track and analyze player movement in real time. Each player is born as a blend of recorded gameplay data, to ensure that the game truly reflects his on-pitch movements. The new Motion System uses this data to model player and ball movements, and create an endless number of scenarios where the game allows for every action. "Players move in all sorts of ways on the pitch, but if you think back to all of the high-intensity matches you've played, and compare the way people move to how we model the player and the ball in FIFA, you'll see just how much more realistic and intuitive the game is in motion." A constant connection between player and ball is the most important factor for any action to take place. This means that goalkeepers should move towards and away from the ball as it moves up the field. Players should also let the ball play a natural path, rather than aggressively controlling it with their feet. "The new understanding of the game created through our Motion System means we can change the way players move just by changing the way the ball moves," said Steve Nicol, FIFA's game director. "It's been the most ambitious challenge I've been involved with, and the change in the gameplay feels like it was worth it." "We talked a lot about player tendencies like always moving in the same direction, and we never had a proper model that could change that. Now the player can run towards or away from the ball depending on whether it's being played wide or central," he added. "These types of things change over time, and we're not interested in locking into a rigid way of playing. We want players to feel that freedom of movement, that they can play with an instinctive style, and that the game gives them the freedom to play in the way they want." In FIFA 21, ball physics were updated in a bid to make ball control more realistic. Fifa 22 2022 Crack introduces "HyperMotion

Technology,” which uses motion capture data collected from 22 real-life players playing a complete, high-intensity football match in motion capture suits. The data collected from player movements, tackles, aerial duels and on-ball actions is used to power FIFA 22 gameplay. Gameplay data compiled by a number
