All three projects will investigate two of the receptor mosaics that are generated early in retinal development. Retinal ganglion cells develop from neural retinal cells in an initial wave of cell death. Development of a second receptor mosaic, the horizontal cells, depends on the genesis of cone cells from photoreceptors that have previously undergone a second round of cell death. The three projects will assess the effects of cone cell death on retinal development by determining the fate of photoreceptors which fail to undergo a second round of cell death. The first project will examine whether cone cells are present in the receptive fields of retinal ganglion cells. The second project will investigate whether cone cell development is accompanied by a migration of cone cells into the ganglion cell layer. The third project will examine whether horizontal cell development is induced by a change in expression of the transcript of a visual pigment gene. The experiments are designed to provide a better understanding of the mechanisms by which cone cells determine the fate of retinal cells in the second mosaic.British prime minister Boris Johnson on Sunday urged the other 27 EU leaders not to give him a blank cheque on negotiating with the bloc next month or leave him "doomed to failure" in a no-deal Brexit, in an interview.
