For many graphic designers, Photoshop is one of the only options for image editing. The application's simplicity and features are unmatched. Some of Photoshop's newer features are particularly useful to designers, including the content-aware fill, panoramic stitching, and vector tools. Professional software is a tricky call, but for most designers, Photoshop is an excellent choice. So if you are looking for a vector-based image editor, or if you need to add a color tint to your photographs, Photoshop is probably the best option. 5. GIMP The GIMP is a free vector-based image editor for the Linux, Windows, and OS X operating systems. It is a favorite among advanced photo editors because it supports many types of graphic and artistic features. It has tools for vector drawing, painting, animation, layering, and color mixing. GIMP supports layers and groups, allowing for advanced editing at the pixel-level. GIMP can be daunting for novice users, so it's not recommended for those just getting started with Photoshop and other image editing tools. GIMP is free, but its base features are limited. It lacks some capabilities of paid software like the Adobe Creative Suite. However, for advanced users and photographers, this is a very powerful, affordable image manipulation program. 6. Paint.NET Paint.NET is a free Windows application. It is similar to Photoshop and is useful to create vector art with complex shapes, such as bevels, gradients, and transparency. It's also useful for photo editing, which is where this program really shines. Its core features are just as powerful as Adobe's Photoshop. Paint.NET also offers drop shadows, for example, and has other useful features, such as layers and curves. This program might not be for everyone, but for advanced users it's a good choice. 7. Affinity Photo Affinity Photo is a powerful native macOS application that has advanced features for retouching, bitmap and vector editing, and editing video. It can import millions of photos and edit them in a single window. It also has a professional photo editor mode. It can handle a large photo library with easy access to all photos. Affinity Photo is also an affordable solution with a subscription. Finally, the program is fast and easy to use. Affinity Photo allows users to save their edits to

Though this is the best free alternative to Photoshop, it does not replace it entirely as both share many of the same features. If you're wondering why you need to use Elements and not Photoshop, you've just stumbled on the main reason: price. Photoshop Elements is a digital photography program that costs nothing, while Photoshop is a professional version of the program that you can buy. Photoshop Elements is a great alternative to Photoshop, but you can't use it to edit the videos you create in other video editors. Adobe Photoshop is a powerful, advanced video editor and a favored tool for hobbyists and professional videographers. Its biggest downside is the price tag. Photoshop Elements is a great alternative to Photoshop. It's free, so there's no excuse to not try it. The latest version of Photoshop Elements is 11, and it includes most of the same features as Photoshop CS6. Photoshop Elements comes with a free version that runs on a portable device. In the beginning, Photoshop Elements was similar to Microsoft Paint. The then-Adobe Photoshop Elements editor couldn't edit graphics beyond an average photograph and was slow and limited. The latest versions of Photoshop Elements (mostly 11) bring new features as well as usability improvements. Its success has spawned a number of standalone graphic programs, similar to Photoshop Elements but cheaper. With that said, Photoshop Elements provides a vital bridge from entry-level photo editing to the professional software. Photoshop Elements is a fun and powerful photo editor that comes with all the essential features you need. It is free and easily customizable, and it runs on multiple platforms. It is a friendly and effective tool for beginners and professionals alike. Often praised as a better alternative to Adobe Photoshop, Adobe Photoshop Elements is a great tool that can accommodate the needs of beginners. The program offers a lot of functions, and you are also able to customize it, even if you aren't a graphic designer. The free version of the program is not entirely free of charge, but it has all the basic functions you need to edit photos and other graphic files. Photoshop Elements is an easy and powerful photo editing tool. The program allows you to edit photos, adjust images, and create new designs, animations, and 3D art. It is a free program that allows you to create graphics for all major social media platforms and includes all basic tools necessary to edit a simple document. 05a79cecf

Show HN: Why the YC Application Process? - jberryman I'm an entrepreneur, and I've been through the YC application process. I've spoken with founders at YC who have gone through the process a couple of times, as well as friends who have gone through it once. What are the implications of the application process? What are the biggest rewards of being accepted? What is the "sorting" of people into categories (e.g. who is "Silicon Valley in residence"? What does that entail, and what do they think about that category?) I'm a student, and my application will be under a fake name (it's OK, not a huge secret). But I want to write something to expose to other students what the process is like. It's something they should all be aware of before they apply. I'm not sure where to direct this, so feel free to point me to a related forum/site if you think it's the right thing for me to do. ===== bhalle We often say pg (the founder of ycombinator) says that there's a "bunch of good projects" in the batch, "one or two" by operating companies and "maybe one or two" by successful startups. Everyone who applies for this batch, and there has been about 515 of them, will be more competitive than in any other round of applications. Since there's no "in residence program", there's no a la carte (or "catered summit") dining halls, no sociable large meetings, no channeling of funds. It's simply a simple process. You're just one of many applicants and only one of about 100 will be accepted. There will be several interviews by 2 to 5 founders, most of whom haven't met before. It's not the program that's interesting but the founders and the founders networks that you gain from going through it. I think it's very fair, honest and open to say that if you don't have a killer idea, no one will write it on you and you're not more likely to have to be groomed. You're also going to have to be better and motivated than the next person. That's nothing to sneeze at. Beyond that, it's impossible to predict if

LAS VEGAS -- Craig Barrish of Harrah's Casino and Resort saw a woman fall while doing Instagram live video, and got video of his heroic action. Barrish was at the M Resort Spa Casino in Las Vegas on July 13. He was at the bar and saw a woman near the elevators with another woman who appeared to be upset. She left with the other woman and the situation escalated. "About six minutes into it, I started walking over to her, noticing that she was clearly having a seizure," Barrish told ABC affiliate KTNV. "I immediately grabbed a chair and put it up against the door and started talking to her and holding her back." On his Facebook page, Barrish posted video of him and another woman attempting CPR. The woman had convulsions and the other woman pressed the chest wall. "She had no pulse," Barrish said. Police officers and medical personnel arrived and placed the woman on a gurney. The ambulance arrived and carried her to another ambulance. The woman was taken to the hospital. The other woman was interviewed by police and a decision on charges was pending. "There's a lot of people that just see things and you never see if it's your own family or someone else's family and it's very scary and scary to try to figure out what's going on," Barrish said. He was called a hero, but his Facebook post shows he had no idea that was a possibility. "I just reacted like every other human being would. I'm not special," he said. Conservatives have bragged the past couple weeks about the plummeting approval ratings of the biggest Democrat in the world, Barack Obama. They are wrong, but the numbers are showing that liberals might finally be waking up to what has been happening, and they are feeling the need to do something about it. A new Rasmussen Reports telephone survey shows that just 45% of American Adults now support President Obama. That is the lowest level of support for Obama since April. Nearly a third (31%) now disapprove of the job he is doing. Those figures include one-third who strongly disapprove and another 17% who somewhat disapprove. The trends are even sharper among Democrats. Just 33% of Democrats approve of his job performance, and 58% strongly disapprove. The poll, taken yesterday, finds that 43% of American adults believe that the U.S. is on the wrong track. Nearly
