It's a great product full of codes and rpg maker xp activation code RPG maker Vx Ace, keygen, crack . Download the most complete keys, serial codes and OPs for the new RPG Maker XP, give an advantage to your RPG maker Vx Ace, keygen, crack .Q: Understanding the output of this function I have a function that returns a list of strings of a input function that doesn't return anything at all. The function is supposed to return a list of strings that are results of a mapping. My problem is that I don't understand the output of the function. My output on a certain line seems to work even though the input should not return anything. I suspect that it has to do with the print statement that appears as the first statement of the function. I suspect I am missing something subtle. Thank you for your help. import numpy as np def m(p): s = [] for x in p(np.zeros(10)): print x s.append(x) return s m([]) OUTPUT: A: I don't see why this code would work as you describe. If you want to see what happens, you can replace the print statement with print(x) and see what happens. This will print the result of the expression passed to it, which is the result of the function call. You can also pass another name as a function parameter, and print that. print(s) Results in an empty list [] because the function didn't modify anything. I suggest you simplify this to something like print(x for x in p(np.zeros(10))) " 'The time which people spend and the energy which they waste in rectifying the production of evidence to support a hypothesis should be guided by the trade-
