Without direct licensing, OEMs must use Pocketsoft's Desktop SDK. - Formerly known as "Bootec's PPC-DSL.NET", PPC-DSL.NET was abandoned in favor of Pocketsoft's OpenPDSL.NET library. PPC-DSL.NET became a wrapper layer providing the foundation for Portable Subsystem PPC, an abstracted runtime platform for compiling Pocketsoft application binaries for handhelds (particularly PalmOS). - PPC-DSL.NET allowed application developers to integrate Pocketsoft application-components into their own native handheld applications (previously called Homebrew binaries). Applications built on the PPC-DSL.NET runtime can be distributed to the public without licensing issues. - PPC-DSL.NET succeeded in making Pocketsoft applications available to the public, but it failed to grow into a robust framework that supported handheld applications and development. After one year of existence, Pocketsoft was sold to Palm Inc. in February 2003 and shut down operations. The PPC-DSL.NET source code was later made available by Palm Inc. - Pocketsoft's OpenPDSL.NET library may be downloaded freely for home or commercial use, but it is not redistributable or free for commercial use.
