This is going to be so much cheaper than that good restaurant you told me about! Doesn't take a genius, just a little bit of research, research, research, a bit of research, and you can save some money!" That's how I felt when I talked myself into doing the very thing I swore I wouldn't do: try to cook dinner in my new apartment, the exact one I had just moved into in mid-December. As an international student, moving to America without any family was a challenge, especially on my own. My best friend since high school, Nate, was in town on leave from D.C. so we were at his Mom's Christmas house which made things easier but still not as easy as I wanted them to be. My dad flew into town a few days early so he could surprise me with Christmas presents, but for some reason, he thought he wouldn't be needed for the immediate future of me arriving stateside. He thought I'd only be staying till I found a job. And he definitely wasn't going to be helping me cook dinner. "If I go out to get some things for you, are you going to help me cook?" I asked my mom via phone. "It's kind of late for a dinner," she said. "Why don't you just go out for Chinese?" she asked. "Chinese? At this time?" I was more than a little shocked by her answer. "They're open. I always order Chinese take-out when I'm out late on New Year's or Chinese New Year because
