In a world of increasingly consumed by social media, it's a commonplace to receive photos and comments of lives normal, from the last party you went to to family photos you see in passing. Selfies take over the streets and increasingly more people are engaging in being the single person watching their own life from the outside. Are you sick of this mundane existence? Do you desperately want to connect with people? In Please Knock on My Door, you are the mysterious character Do-young, who has been locked up in his apartment for over a year, for a decision of his own making. From a first-person perspective, the game will let you uncover what happened to Do-young on his doorstep, while exploring the mysterious surroundings, city and climate of Korea. As you do this, you will meet other residents, including the mysterious author. What happened to Do-young? Did you get arrested for protesting? Of course, as you'll play Please Knock on My Door, you'll uncover an emotional journey that will have you paying more attention to how your actions affect those around you. Perhaps there is something more personal than a suspicious society? The mysteries are endless and you'll have to choose your own path and tell your own story. Why would I want to play Please Knock on My Door? This is no ordinary game. It is a narrative game, where you as the player will be using text, photos, and audio to uncover a story and your own emotions. Developed By Gabriele Succi About Gabriele Succi Gabriele Succi is a freelance game writer based in Seoul, Korea. He is a rising senior at The University of Texas, Austin, where he is majoring in Computer Science and Engineering. His greatest passion is writing, and before starting a career in video game development, he spent a year making his own game, also called "Please Knock on My Door", and released it on mobile devices. He has been playing video games since he was a child. He is currently working on a mobile game called "Make Some Noise". 45 Comments Comments I'm quite confused about what the game is about. The concept behind the game is very intriguing, but the execution is absolutely terrible. The story is still in progress. There is no real "front" on which you can connect with the characters, and I think a lot of people could have liked the game if the character designs

B.D.K is a short experimental first person horror game that mainly relies on atmosphere, sounds and one or two jump scares to create an eerie and creepy experience, the main part of the game takes you across multiple familiar horror tropes(forest, graveyard) while the other part of the game follows a more simpler path akin to a walking simulator. For more info on the story: B.D.K is a short experimental first person horror game that mainly relies on atmosphere, sounds and one or two jump scares to create an eerie and creepy experience, the main part of the game takes you across multiple familiar horror tropes(forest, graveyard) while the other part of the game follows a more simpler path akin to a walking simulator.The story in more detail: You wake up one night in the forest, having no memory from the past few days. You soon find out that you seem to have lost your way, but that you can also sense the presence of unseen things. Everything around you seems to be moving, but you can't seem to understand what that's about. With the increased tension comes an increase in paranoia, which leads to you getting scared on your way through the forest. You soon find out that you have to walk through the graveyard. You slowly start to realize that there's more going on then just the woods and the forest, but you soon find yourself with no other choice. What's new in Lovely Planet Arcade:

Sam & Max Save the World (sometimes abbreviated as Sam & Max) is an American animated comedy series starring the Sam and Max character created by special effects artist Bruce Taff and comics artist Steve Purcell. It was first broadcast on Cartoon Network on April 9, 2000, and ran for four seasons, with a total of 43 episodes produced. During the series' run, a comic series based on the series, also produced by Purcell and Taff, was published by IDW Publishing. There also was a running webcomic titled Sam & Max Save the World, which gave background stories about what happened after the games. The series follows the protagonists, Sam and Max, who are on a mission to save the world. In the process, it deals with many classic, absurdist comedy themes. Taking a tongue-in-cheek tone, many of the episodes take place inside the game of Point of View, which is implied to be a ploy by the main antagonist, Smith. One of Sam & Max's more noteworthy goals was the complete understanding of vertigo, which is a major component of the episode, "Vertigo!", which includes a talking head sequence. The series was generally well-received, often regarded as one of the greatest animated series of all time, and won several Annie Awards. Two games based on the series were released: Rise of the Runaways and Get to the Chopper!. Four VHS tapes containing episodes from the first three seasons were released by the company ReBoot Entertainment, and one DVD boxset collecting all four seasons was released by Lionsgate Home Entertainment. Setting Sam & Max Save the World is based on the Point of View concept of the Snark's game series, which centers on experiencing the world from the point of view of strangers. In each episode, a character called Smith enters a different world (such as a different timeline or a different dimension), which is obtained by shooting a gun at the screen, only to be attacked by his former friends in the real world in order to reverse and return to the beginning of the episode. A common thread throughout the series is that Sam and Max always try to catch up to Smith, even though everything in their lives is a complete mess. As the series progresses, the protagonists achieve their goals with Smith in the end. Eventually, in the final episode of the series, Smith admits to being a fictional villain and stops trying to get away with the blame. His
