Photoshop CS5 is available as a Mac version as well as a Windows version. ABI/Adobe InDesign Created by Adobe Systems, InDesign, like Photoshop, is a software program that allows you to create HTML, PDF, and multimedia files. You can also get more control over the file by separating design elements that can be moved, resized, and so on. Using the move, stretch, and flip commands, you can stretch or flatten objects on a page to suit the size of the page. Moreover, when you choose InDesign to create a PDF, you can choose the size of the page, whether you want only text, an image, a link, and more. When designing for a web site or a print advertisement, you can choose the best presentation format. InDesign does most of the legwork in organizing these pages to fit a particular size. It also includes commands to build blocks of information, import external files, and print to PDF as well. InDesign allows you to create and manage themes that determine how the layout of pages looks. You can also easily turn a graphic into a block, including text, colors, shapes, and shadows that can be used when creating a web page. InDesign is available for the Mac as well as a Windows version. The free version of InDesign, CS6, is available as a Mac and a Windows version. Adobe Dreamweaver If you create websites, Dreamweaver is the program you want to use. It's the most powerful web page editor on the market today, and Adobe uses Dreamweaver to build the websites, Flash games, and other online applications that you see on the web. Dreamweaver is the flagship product in the Adobe family. It enables you to build pages that can work on all common web browsers as well as mobile, tablet, and other internet devices. You can easily add photos, text, graphics, and other design elements to create a site that is unique to your own vision. You can use the built-in feature for those adding interactive features, such as the dragging, sliders, and keyboard interactions, to move items from the page. Dreamweaver also includes a feature called CSS3, which allows you to add visual styles to your web pages. This feature uses styles to set formatting on the text, images, and other elements. You can format or style all the content on your page or choose to style only selected

A landlord makes a bad investment, a builder builds a bad house, and a construction company builds a bad wall. So why do home buyers still insist that contracts be in writing? What was once thought to be a basic formality – a home buyer signing a contract as proof of ownership – is, it seems, anything but. The International Centre for Real Estate Law (ICREL) has released a report on the influence of contracts on the NSW property market. After uncovering some interesting information, it recommends that the NSW government look into drafting contracts, stamp them and make them freely available to all home buyers. The report found that in NSW, the buyer must obtain a full title report before the contract can be stamped. Because the buyer and seller take so many steps, the process of getting a contract stamped is actually very time-consuming. Therefore, many buyers just move into a new house, pay for it, and leave the contract locked in the mailbox. The report found that in NSW, the buyer must obtain a full title report before the contract can be stamped. Image: Author supplied. There is also a small amount of digital information that can not be underlined for good reason. The report found that the most common thing it looked at was the option to accept or reject a contract. Some of the problems with the common paper-based option are: the option cannot be changed and can't be subdivided. Another option included in the contract is a deposit refund option. This creates even more problems as there is no way of changing who the deposit belongs to and no way of knowing when the refund is due. The final common option is a relocation 'waiver' clause which, as the title says, waives the seller's right to sue the buyer if they decide to leave the property after the sale. The ICREL report also found there was a high level of private land sales. This is because of the difficulty buyers have in walking away from a contract, even if they are unhappy with the contract terms. For example, a buyer can go onto the land and start building, which makes it very difficult to back out. As land is both expensive and scarce, this could lead to a shortage of land for homes. Other common shortcomings of contracts include: Lack of legally binding language, with most contracting acts carried out in writing but not having legal backing Un

Q: Use Google font in Django I have been trying to use Google font in Django. It is also created in Python. I have tried with the following: @font-face { font-family: "Roboto"; src:url(''); } @font-face { font-family: "Roboto"; src:url(''); } @font-face { font-family: "Roboto"; src:url(''); } I have tried with the above ones. But while working, it shows an error: A: You have some typos in your css. Google font requires "src" tag with "http" protocol. @font-face { font-family: "Roboto"; src:url(''); } Q: regex - remove parenthesis from strings that match I have a field that has parenthesis, but they're not necessary and they can be anywhere. So I need to take care of this by stripping the parenthesis from strings that match the pattern (?=\(.?\)) I am using Notepad++ and this is what I have so far: (?=\(.?\))\b #this is
