Camera Models In a technical sense, a camera is a single device, but we like to think of a camera as a grouping of components, including the camera body, lens, sensor, memory card, and computer. Let's not get too complicated, but just know that a camera can have many different components. Most consumers own only a single type of camera — usually the one that's included with a new digital-imaging device. Why not buy a new digital camera? As a photographer, you should always have at least one camera to use for

The long term objective of the National Natural Science Foundation is to foster excellence in science and research at the University of Florida. To achieve this objective, the National Program will provide additional salary support for professors, award additional research support for graduate students and postdoctoral fellows, purchase much needed equipment and consumables, and make funds available for summer workshops. Support for graduate students and postdoctoral fellows is crucial for the research enterprise because these individuals make vital contributions to the creation of knowledge and the dissemination of that knowledge to society. The broad goals of the Program are to increase the number and quality of competitive federally supported research projects and to attract talented minority candidates to research careers at the University of Florida. The specific aims of the National Program are: a) To increase the current level of funding for research from $12.7 million to $15.7 million, or about 8.5% growth; b) To increase the number of competitive research proposals from 294 in 2001 to 375 in the 2003 budget, or about 14% growth; c) To increase the number of junior faculty positions funded from 15 to 20 in the 2003 budget, which is about 7% growth; d) To award funding to support the salary of 7 new faculty members in the 2003 budget, which is about 17% growth; and, e) To increase the number of competitively funded minority fellowships to 34 in the 2003 budget, which is about 30% growth. The National Program will support twelve (12) faculty members, fifteen (15) graduate students, four (4) postdoctoral fellows and three (3) minority graduate students (5 women and 2 minority men). A UK-based tennis player has claimed the title of "world's biggest cheater" after defrauding the sport's world governing body to win points. Student Louis Bamford, 22, achieved the ignominious feat after he managed to match all of the bookings against the world's top tennis players at the latest World Tennis Association rankings. Hawk-Eye, which provides electronic tracking to worldwide competitions, rated Bamford's technique 50 times worse than leading players. Download the new Independent Premium app Sharing the full story, not just the headlines Bamford, who has played tennis since he was six, was ranked 2,279 in the world, after a meteoric rise when he won the British Junior Tour Championship in 2009. He was able to beat all 120 of the world's players in the rankings last weekend, after having to attend a full

Orthopaedic mechanisms in a large series of dogs with presumptive meningomyelocele. Sixteen-thousand three-hundred and eighty-six dogs that had undergone surgical correction for meningomyelocele (MMC) were evaluated for orthopaedic and neurologic sequelae. The dogs were divided into five groups based on the type of surgical correction. Orthopaedic evaluation was performed by use of an evaluation form that was designed based on system of evaluation advocated by Rodriguez. One hundred and nine dogs (2.8%) had orthopaedic sequelae. Thirty-three dogs (0.8%) were only examined neurologically, whereas seven dogs (0.2%) were only examined orthopaedically. Seven hundred and thirty-four dogs (19.2%) had orthopaedic and neurological examinations. Forty-seven per cent of dogs had cranial nerve deficits that were attributable to the MMC. Thirty-eight per cent of dogs had neurologic deficits that could not be attributed to the MMC. Fifty-five dogs (1.4%) had not had any orthopaedic or neurologic examination. These dogs had either skull deformities that made neurologic evaluation difficult or were euthanized. Blood-feeding patterns and host preference
