I am reading through some material on Kepler's third law and happened across a statement in the chapter Notes on the Perfect Moon: "For a star to be a perfect one, the ratio of star to planet will be one:1. I just have one question: How is that a perfect one? Could you please explain? Edit: I understand that if the star is smaller than the planet, it must be a less perfect one. A: A perfect star system would be one in which the ratio of the stellar mass to the planetary mass is one:1. This means that the star has the same mass as the planet. In practice, the stellar mass is much more than the planetary mass so most star systems are far from perfect. A: A "perfect star" means that it has the same mass as the planet. Obviously, stars are much more massive than planets - that is why it is "one-star-to-one-planet". As you say, if you are looking at the ratio for a star to planet you are only going to get the "near-perfect" ratios for small stars. For stars that are more massive than Jupiter, we will get a larger ratio. There's a limit to how much larger it can be as a planet is going to be extremely well bound (when it formed). They seem to be mostly making the xbox one and two exclusive to them. What do you think? It's true, Nintendo announced that we would have to buy Mario Kart 8 on our Xbox One or PS4 if we wanted to play on the online service. It would cost $19.99.The reason this is saddening is because Mario Kart is one of Nintendo's biggest series. Mario Kart, Super Mario Kart, Mario Kart Wii, Mario Kart 7, and Mario Kart 8 have been pretty much the only Mario Kart games. This would mean that Nintendo would rather spend money on a new IP (like I think the NX will be) than support their most famous series online.I don't know what to think. I mean, it's a very bold move by Nintendo and it will most likely flop.But then again Nintendo likes to do bold things.Before the Wii U, Nintendo never released a portable system. Then Nintendo released the Wii U. Its controller was small, did not require a TV, and could play games made for consoles, thus freeing up Nintendo to release games made for consoles on tablets.Most people don't even use Nintendo consoles because they are so locked down. Nintendo have always been one of the most restrictive companies on those consoles. I don't know what to think about Nintendo with the NX and online services. Don't you think Nintendo want's to cut that they can not people that love them?Q: C++ - How to split a string on any number of spaces? I'm trying to split a string on any number of spaces.
