think the problem with sustainable growth is precisely that its impossible to judge whether, after some considerable period, the consequence is success. Success can only be judged when the project is complete, but in theory the groundswell of support for a project can continue for a long time before the project becomes a runaway success, or collapses, the terms of debate being irrelevant. Personally, I'm not worried about sustainability of a project. I'm worried about its success. I worry that most people are happy when they don't know the truth. In their minds, they do a good job, and are happy. Others not so happy sometimes, but not really worried. They'd rather keep people that they think are good rather than risk a change of direction and a re-examination of why they were happy in the first place. That way they don't have to try and change and reform what they're doing, thinking that they'll do a good job and be happy when they don't have to look at themselves, their profession or themselves at all. I worry about sustainable growth. I worry about that because of its overt honesty. Not that people are always dishonest, but I think we live in a disingenuous age, and we're all too good at being deceiving, at least some of the time. Is this a problem with growth? Well, growth is an ongoing problem, albeit one which happens slowly,
