"This is another significant advancement for our game," said Adam Sussman, President of Electronic Arts. "By collecting data directly from the player, and using that data to improve the game, we can give you a sense of how real football moves feel." "We're thrilled to see EA's commitment to capturing real-world, high-intensity football matches," said David Rutter, VP of High-Intensity Football at PAS. "We're incredibly excited about the technology and how it will change football." Data captured on the pitch using the suits includes player positions and their direction of movement, as well as the type and distance of all tackles, successful headers and aerial challenges. The team also analysed how real players approach and react to the ball, incorporating aspects of speed, acceleration, turning, carrying, tackling and jumping to create a more realistic experience. The technology also enables the team to understand how players move and perform different actions in a wide variety of conditions to find gameplay solutions. The aim is to improve player movement and the ball's artificial intelligence (AI), fine tune the handling and understanding of the ball at higher speeds to give a more authentic and natural feeling of the game, and optimise the ball physics to give a much greater variation in where the ball goes, when it goes and how it behaves. Motion capture data analysis and creation of player models (rendered in FIFA) were done in partnership with the French company Hexacim, using specialised software and tools. The final graphics cards and consoles are used to run the game, but the AI and physics are all created in-house. "This is an incredible milestone for us," said Peter Higgs, CEO of Hexacim. "The benefits are limitless, not just to FIFA, but to the gaming industry as a whole, and we're thrilled with what we're creating together." EA SPORTS FIFA 19 is built on the FIFA 19 engine, the latest iteration of the franchise's award-winning engine. FIFA 19 features hundreds of new animations and over 50 real player transfers, some of which have been retooled to make soccer more exciting. EA SPORTS FIFA 19 has evolved year-over-year since its launch and the FIFA 19 engine and gameplay continue to be optimized to produce the most authentic and robust soccer video game experience possible. Gameplay The control systems of FIFA 19 are more refined and responsive. New controls, new animation retargeting and a new way to execute dribbles in possession all make navigating the pitch easier than ever before. In-game footage of the new FIFA 19 gameplay FIFA 19 brings three times more animations to life across the pitch with an enhanced, accessible Career mode. Matchday AI responds more dynamically to players' actions, taking better decisions during and at the end of matches. In-game footage of the new FIFA 19 gameplay The active and intelligent crowd can react differently depending on how the ball moves and where it lands on the pitch. New crowd reactions, chants, speakers and decibel levels make FIFA 19 a more immersive live experience in more ways than ever before. In-game footage of the new FIFA 19 gameplay Dribbling FIFA 19's revised dribbling mechanics place control and use of space at the very heart of the new dribbling system. Players can now perform 360 spins and fake runs to produce more effective dribbles and move away from players when under pressure. In-game footage of the new FIFA 19 gameplay Passing As the game world evolves, so does the passing system. Players' success depends on their ability to find space, pass accurately, execute the correct pass, and evade or mark players. In-game footage of the new FIFA 19 gameplay Player Intelligence In FIFA 19, players react to your actions on the pitch. When you hesitate or lose possession, they'll accelerate to claim the ball while you're still processing the situation. In-game footage of the new FIFA 19 gameplay Championship FIFA 19 will offer the most extensive Championship mode of any FIFA title, bringing in-depth gameplay, comprehensive Player and Club modes, and a new and dynamic relegation system.
