During the lithographic step, the carrier is moved either by mechanical means (such as a fan, motor, etc.) or by hydraulic means (pumps, etc.). According to the invention, the carrier becomes laden with the liquid during a first step. During a second step, the liquid is transported along the carrier. During this second step, the liquid is subjected to a gradient of values of pressure along the carrier, or even to a gradient of values of pressure in the circumferential direction (depending on the aspect ratio of the carrier, the liquid flow can be substantially radial or circumferential or substantially axial or radial or circumferential). This second step is interrupted for a third step. In this third step, the liquid is transported along the carrier, and the gradient of values of pressure along the carrier or the gradient of values of pressure in the circumferential direction are reduced. In a fourth step, the liquid is discharged from the carrier, this discharge takes place for example when the carrier leaves the printing unit. The present disclosure relates to subject matter contained in French patent application No. 99/13248, filed on Oct. 9, 1999, which is hereby incorporated by reference in its entirety. The present invention
