Adding a new layer To create a new layer, click the New Layer icon (shown in the margin). Photoshop creates the new layer above the layer that you currently have active. It also creates a selection marquee around the current layer, as shown on the left in Figure 6-2. To select a layer that's not currently active, press the OK button. To select the active layer (the layer that's currently active), hold down the Shift key (as in Shift+Ctrl+click) while you click the current active layer. FIGURE 6-2: To create a new layer, click the New Layer icon.

Nitric oxide (NO) generated from nitric oxide synthase (NOS) is a ubiquitous molecule and plays an important role in the regulation of physiological functions of various tissues. An enzyme that catalyzes NO production from L-arginine is classified into NOS and iNOS, respectively. Normally, NOS catalyzes the conversion of L-arginine to L-citrulline and NO, and is further classified into three types according to the source of the L-arginine substrate. For example, Ca²⁺/calmodulin (CaM)-dependent constitutive NOS (cNOS) is present in vascular endothelial cells, airway smooth muscle, etc., whereas CaM-independent cNOS and a CaM-independent neuronal NOS (nNOS) are present in various neural cells. A type of enzyme that uses L-arginine which is not a substrate of CaM-dependent NOS is called iNOS. iNOS is stimulated by endotoxin (lipopolysaccharide: LPS), interferon, tumor necrosis factor, etc., and is induced to produce large quantities of NO that acts as an important mediator in the functions of various tissues. The function of iNOS may be involved in the pathogenesis of various diseases, such as inflammatory diseases, hypertension, diabetes, shock, arthritis, depression, as well as tolerance to the diseases, i.e., formation of drug resistance or hyper sensitivity. In particular, the involvement of iNOS in various diseases has been intensively investigated. For example, the expression of iNOS is increased in many autoimmune diseases, such as multiple sclerosis, rheumatoid arthritis, or systemic lupus erythematosus, and non-autoimmune diseases, such as renal ischemia or renal transplantation, and plays a role in the pathogenesis of these diseases. Moreover, it has been found that the expression of iNOS is enhanced after transplantation of islets of Langerhans and that NO generated from iNOS may play a role in the destruction of transplanted islets. The expression of iNOS has been found in rheumatoid arthritis and the NO level has been shown to increase in a rheumatoid arthritis patient. In addition, the NO level in the joints or the synovia of RA patients is correlated with

Q: Are there any good proven or tested principals for aligning website pages? I am having two same pages in the same website (different url, same path in database, no DB changes). One page is a list, the other a form. My question is do I have to align the two pages when I display them? Are there any principals to align such two pages? A: You shouldn't do any alignment unless you are required to by something. Take a look at HTML and CSS alignment and pre-conceptions. As stated in the linked site, "aligning a form and a sidebar isn't usually necessary." What may be your pre-conceptions is that you always want a form and a list on the same page? That will usually be the case for most sites, but not always. You should make your site meet the needs of your users and be able to make any changes to your site easily. or "Why do you wear a tie to work?" So let's see. We try to make the working situation as tidy as possible. We try to make sense of the system that we are asked to participate in as well as we can. We try not to make any one group or individual look stupid. And that, according to me, is the best we can do. Following that credo, I've been humbled by learning a little about a woman who might be the most sincere, warmhearted and intelligent person I've ever known. I saw Jessica Bruderle, in June, at the Mennonite Women of Iowa luncheon at the Ramada Inn in Des Moines. Bruderle got up and thanked the group for the opportunity to speak. She had just returned from several weeks in Israel, where she and her husband, Mark, serve as missionaries for the Church of God in Christ, with Mennonite Central Committee. Her Mennonite heritage requires a "double envelopment," she explained. On the inside, Mennonites practice an "amid," an awareness of their responsibility to God and to their neighbors. On the outside, they practice the outward manifestation of the Christian faith, the things that are traditionally done in "mainstream" Lutheran, Catholic or Protestant circles. "Within the history of the Mennonite churches, our history is basically a mission work," she explained. One of the things they tried to do in
