The present invention relates to polypropylene compositions and more particularly to propylene/.alpha.-olefin copolymers having improved film physical properties. Propylene/ethylene/vinyl alcohol copolymers are generally known in the art to be useful in the production of various films, such as films of the blown or cast-type. The use of propylene/ethylene copolymers in such applications is disclosed in U.S. Pat. Nos. 2,896,329 and 3,812,180. These patents disclose that propylene/ethylene copolymers may be blended with other elastomers, including natural rubber, to produce a wide range of useful elastomer/copolymer compositions. More recently, it has been suggested that copolymers of polypropylene and .alpha.-olefins, such as ethylene/propylene copolymers and ethylene/propylene/vinyl acetate terpolymers, may be used in the production of various films. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 4,111,895 discloses that certain ethylene/propylene/ethylacrylate terpolymers may be used in the production of films which have improved heat sealing

For example: Dim a As Decimal = 123.123 The point should be in the end and the text should be 123.123 However, the test always fails: Assert.AreEqual("123.123", a.ToString()) I know this is probably because of the culture of the application but my question is: How do I test whether the decimal point is correctly in the end of the text? Is there an alternative? I want to avoid using Decimal.Parse because it forces the culture to C#, and I don't want to force the culture everytime. A: I want to avoid using Decimal.Parse because it forces the culture to C#, and I don't want to force the culture everytime. That's because var c = 123.123; var d = 123.123M; Console.WriteLine(c); Console.WriteLine(d); give you different results, and the second one doesn't give you anything useful. You will need to use some sort of unit test framework, ideally one that lets you set the number format to "decimal" and the culture to whatever you want. Personally, I would also argue that you shouldn't be storing numbers this way at all -
