Refinement of the method. Steroid
extraction from biomass
using enzymes is a
promising strategy to obtain commercial
products, but the
process may be plagued
by low and variable

selectivity. We describe here a method for pretreatment of a food by-product, i.e., banana fibers, by cellulase from Aspergillus Niger. The major part of cellulase is filtered at low speed, and the residue, which accounts for 80% of the total activity, is recovered in the supernatant by centrifugation. This newly obtained enzyme preparation is then used
