This seems an easy question but I haven't been able to find the answer online so far. I have a NSArrayController in my NSWindowController. I have a row of NSTableViewItems bound to the array controller. The first cell contains an NSTextField, so that is the way to access the NSArrayController. Everything is wired up and working fine, except that all of the items are actually bound to NSArrayControllers inside the NSViewController that is the parent of the NSWindowController. When the user selects a cell, a new NSViewController comes up, containing a few NSTextFields, a NSTableView, an NSTableView, and a NSView (in that order). What I want to happen is for the content of all of the text fields in the new NSTableView to be routed to that NSViewController. I am very new to Cocoa and Interface Builder, but this is the sort of problem I've had to deal with before. I can add another NSViewController, for the NSTableView (then add the text fields to that NSTableView), but this seems like it is an unnecessary step. Also, I don't know how to route the content to this new view (maybe a delegate), or should I add a different delegate to the array controller that is connected to the NSTableViewItem? Any help would be much appreciated.

Thanks. A: I assume your NSTableViewItem is created from an NSTableCellView. If this
