I'm a student in an undergrad communication program, and while searching for a way to keep track of friends and distances between them, I realized that I'd need to store an array of locations. For any iOS developer, I feel as though I'm going to ask something stupid. But, I'm willing to dive in and learn the nitty-gritty as long as I have a direction. What I am thinking of doing is creating an 'array' of points, and have a call to load friends based on the location. Approach #1 - Straight from Apple: I've heard that Apple doesn't recommend creating a new array for this. I could only think of 3 options: When retrieving friends' ids from the database, retrieve them as a list, and create an array directly from the list (not storing the actual IDs directly). Create an array using NSData, and save the array as binary data to the file system, then load it back into an array (in objective-C) Create an array and serialize it to a string (in objective-c), then convert the string back to an array (in C++). What is the best approach for
