and pericarditis is a frequent manifestation of systemic illnesses (40% of cases of myocarditis). In 1994, a series of 917 patients with acute pericarditis was treated at Emergency Room of Murcia Hospital and the treatment of 67 patients (7.4%) was complicated by recurrent or persistent pericarditis. In this latter group, the incidence of secondary etiology was higher and the incidence of a dysfunctional syndrome higher in men than in women. The general clinical characteristics were fever (100%), constrictive pericarditis (18.4%) and functional class II-III (83%). In the etiology of acute pericarditis, the most frequent were myocarditis (31.8%) and idiopathic pericarditis (23.4%). In this series of patients with recurrent pericarditis, the etiology was myocarditis in 7 out of 8 patients and idiopathic pericarditis in 1 out of 8 cases; secondary etiologies were culture-negative endocarditis, infective endocarditis and mycosis. During the follow up period (10 months), 5 patients with recurrent pericarditis required a pericardiocentesis because of apericardial effusion with or without constrictive pericarditis, whose relapses occurred in a shorter time than in patients
