Artinsoft VBUC V4.0.10422.73Image caption Jones is the leader of the Democratic Unionist Party Former Ulster Unionist leader and deputy first minister Peter Robinson has called for Mark Graham to be reinstated as Northern Ireland's chief constable. He said Mr Graham should be replaced by a "staunch Unionist", rather than a loyalist. Mr Robinson said he had no doubt about Mr Graham's ability or professionalism but said he had been "drained of confidence" by the DUP leader, Arlene Foster. The DUP said Mr Graham's reinstatement "would be detrimental to the overall policing of the province". The Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI) is the lead agency when it comes to dealing with Londonderry and Strabane. It said it could not comment on the issue of who would take over the role, as any changes in leadership would have to come from the executive. "Mark Graham and the PSNI remain committed to maintaining good relations with the people of Northern Ireland and will continue to work tirelessly with the community to make Northern Ireland one of the safest places to live," said a spokesman for the PSNI. At its heart, the arrest of Mr Robinson in 2011 was about trying to topple the first directly-elected power-sharing government and the perception of collusion with republicans. Mark Graham was the first chief constable of the Police Service of Northern Ireland. 'Sick mind' The former deputy first minister, who was arrested and released on bail on suspicion of the same offences a day later, is now the leader of the Democratic Unionist Party. He did not call for Mr Graham's resignation but said he had "somewhat sickened and horrified" by the legacy of the PSNI.
