I found an interesting questions, but my response is two-sided. I have one workspace and several projects, but I would like to apply style settings to a specific file. For example, I have php files with Umlauts, but I want to remove them from the code style settings (they must be there in the code). So when I open any file with those characters, I should have it's style (language, etc) in place. Is this possible with PhpStorm (current version for Windows)? A: Go to settings/editor/language/other. I don't know what language settings you have, but I assume you are using the default of PHP. Look at the line: [build in] To the left of that line, there's a drop-down box. Open that and there you can pick your language, and you can even change it for every file type in the folder containing that file. G.
