Search Internet & Download the latest version PC.Q: How to choose a single column output in a query using PySpark I have a large data set stored in a PySpark DataFrame. I want to select only one column and run a case analysis on that column. I could retrieve the data with the following code: `from pyspark.sql import SQLContext sc = SQLContext(sc) dataset = sc.read.csv(", header=True, sep=',') # Create new data frame from given file fileDF = dataset.repartition(1).cache() fileDF.cache()` This data set has nearly a million rows, and so using the `dataset.select('some column')` is going to take very long, so I want to select a single column (perhaps using a window function?) and analyze the data in the fileDF against the selected column. I found the following code online: `fileDF.select("select (filename_column), length(filename_column) from file_table", "LAMBDA(filename_column)")` But this gives me an error: Exception: Error while
