The school in Giridih town will have "awaken the inner beauty" of the girl students, who will showcase their skills by dancing to popular Bollywood songs. "A new tradition of organising programmes with the help of junior teachers will be celebrated in the school at the end of the day, where the skills of the students will be displayed in traditional, indigenous dances, songs and folk arts. "The programme is being organised with the involvement of the residents of the neighbourhood under the guidance of the principal of the school," said Vinod Kumar, registrar at the Giridih district public school. Around 1,063 girls students will be a part of the dance programme, Kumar said. Observing the country's first International Women's Day on March 8, the deputy minister in charge of the Department of School Education was of the opinion that schools need to learn from each other. "Schools will celebrate International Women's Day with the help of teachers and students in their neighbourhood. They (schools) must prepare a traditional lunch for the students, a cultural programme and must conduct exercises which they would ordinarily do in the schoolday," JK

A primary key is added in each table. The order of execution of the stored procedure is: CREATE TABLE INSERT Now there is a race condition where at times an insert gets saved in (1) at the time of execution of (3). I have discovered this by running a print statement right before the insert statement. Is there a way we can handle this if a record is getting inserted in (1) at the time of executing (3)? The same situation can occur for updation CREATE TABLE UPDATE DELETE Here we have no control on what order the updates are done in as the tables have relations between them and updates are cascade like updates across the relations A: First, you should not have a race condition. That is, it sounds like you are planning something where you have two or more separate actions which could be done in an order by accident. That's not a good idea. However, you can delay one of your queries until you see that the other query has finished. You could create a single statement which looks like this: DECLARE @inserted bool; BEGIN TRY EXECUTE [dbo].[uspAddItem]; SET @inserted 6d1f23a050
