Unlikely. It turns out you may not even know that they are Jewish. That they are both now Jews is, at least, clear from the U.S. State Department's description of each as having "obtained [their] U.S. citizenship as a result of operations approved by the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service" and as having been issued a Certificate of Naturalization. To get the operative definition of each of these two individuals - two distinct persons, yet two obviously alike - you need only look to the State Department. And this is the way, it has always been, in this administration, with this president, with this country. The theory in which Bush & Co. believe is that Americans become "Americans" only when they are issued a Certificate of Naturalization. The Bush administration, therefore, must believe, for example, that Governor George Bush is not a "natural-born" American citizen. In fact, Bush's parents became U.S. citizens after he was born, and were natural-born. So were his parents, and his grandfather, and his great grandfather, and his great great grandfathers. So were they and their great great great grandfathers. So, too, were their great great great great grandfathers and their great great great great great grandfathers back to the time of the Founding Fathers. So, too, was Christopher Columbus a natural-born American. So, too, were many of the early French and Spanish settlers who inhabited the Atlantic Coast and the Mississippi River Basin, many of the Puritans and Quakers who went west, and the millions and millions of immigrants who have come to the U.S. since the end of the 19th century. It's all true, of course. But c6a93da74d
