A: You can change the action to whichever you like using the action parameter. Example: $("#download_file").on("click",function(e){ e.preventDefault(); $("#dialog_modal").dialog("open"); $("#dialog_modal").load("/My_Path/download.php?user_key=" + user_key + "&file_name=" + file_name + "&action=" + action); }); This example is using an onclick attribute for the button and then loading the download.php file. To get you started with your sample code, try something like this: $("#download_file").on("click",function(e){ e.preventDefault(); $("#dialog_modal").dialog("open"); $("#dialog_modal").load("/My_Path/download.php?user_key=" + user_key + "&file_name=" + file_name + "&action=download"); }); The "download" action in your PHP example is just a placeholder, you can use whatever you like. I would suggest using the $_GET["download"] variable to specify the download action. You can get your data from the form using $_c6a93da74d
